

TRIED TO KIDNAP GIRL OF FIVE IN HOBOKEN

Drunken Man Fights Police Who Rescue Pretty Child at Ferry-House.

When John Heffernan, a building, suburban man of forty, holding from some where in the slums of New York, practically admitted in the Recorder's Court at Hoboken today that he abducted five-year-old Marie Carniaux from her home and had tried to smuggle her across the Hudson River to his waterfront haunts in Manhattan, the crowd that had been listening showed a strong desire to lay violent hands on him. Recorder Stanton held the fellow without bond. He swore savagely at the crowd as two turnkeys hustled him off into the lock-up.

Actions Caused Suspicion.
Patrolman McGinnis and Houndeman Torrey were on guard at the Fourteenth street ferry, on the Hoboken side, last night. About 1:30 o'clock a middle-aged man, roughly dressed and leading by the hand a child of remarkable beauty, appeared in the street in front of the ferry-house. The actions of the man attracted the attention of the policemen. Every time the pair reached the entrance the child would shrink back, trying vainly to put away from the man's grasp. Instead of forcing her to obey him, the man would draw the little rebel back into the shadow, argue with her for a moment, and then make a fresh start for the door. After they had seen this performance twice, repeated Torrey and McGinnis shouted up.

"What's the trouble with the little girl?" asked Torrey.
The man, averting his face, muttered something about the child being afraid.
"Is your child, then?" persisted Torrey.

"Sure," growled the man. "We live in New York."
With their suspicions pretty well allayed, the policemen started away. As they turned about the child cried out:
"Little Girl Gives Alarm."

"This had man isn't my papa! He wants to take me away from my mamma and papa!"
The man, seeing a funny business, said Torrey to the man. "Suppose you come up with us to the station-house and we'll talk it over."

The answer from the man was a blow.
He released his grip on the child's arm and fought the two bluecoats for a moment. He had enough liquor in him to make him regardless of the fact that the two policemen answered him. He had to be practically beaten into unconsciousness with the night-sticks before the officers could get him on his knees.

As soon as the patrol wagon reached the Second Precinct the child was recognized. A general alarm had just been sent out for her. She was Marie Carniaux, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs.
Charles Carniaux, of No. 1134 Hudson street, Hoboken. She had disappeared from her home early in the afternoon and her parents had been searching for her ever since.

The little girl, who has big black eyes and long black curls, said the stranger had taken her away from the vicinity of her parents' house soon after her lunch, and that he had been carrying her about with him all the afternoon. A physical examination showed that no attempt had been made to harm her.

Before the Recorder the prisoner gave his name as John Heffernan and his age as forty. First he said he lived at No. 20 Howard street, New York, but later he said he worked at the Glen Island Hotel on West street. Recorder Stanton said he would hold him without bail for attempted kidnapping.
